BOOSTING NIGERIA'S FOOD SECURITY

Prof. Ademola Tayo: Boosting food security

) abcock University is set to boost Nigeria's food security with a subsidized tuition for students of Agriculture effective from next academic session.

President/Vice Chancellor, Professor Ademola S. Tayo who stated this while declaring open the 2018 edition of the gramme, nect, described ment the gesture as the University's

"little contribution" to complementing government's effort in upscaling the country's agriculture status and food security.

He further revealed that the University's commercialization of Agricultural products over the years pro- have yielded dividends. "Right now, #Babcock most of the raw mate-AgriCon- rials utilized in the Food services departare sourced from the farm maintained by the department," he said.

> Dean of Science and Technology, Prof Stephen Fapohunda said the programme was also targeted at encouraging youths to embrace Agropreneurship while networking and sharing experiences with experts in the industry.

"Collaboration in cross fertilization of ideas is the in thing as no one has a monopoly of knowledge," said Senior Vice President Academics. Prof. Iheanyichukwu Okoro. "When you want to achieve more, you work as a team."

He reminded participants of the need to maximize the experie n c e gleaned from collaboration with professional colleagues and bridge the sector.

While expressing his appreciation for administration's support, the Dean of the School of Nursing, Prof. Ezekiel Ajao, commended the initiative as brilliant and effective for fostering professional network.

For programme initiator and President/CEO of Vigor Health Drive Inc, Princess Stephanie Nnamchi, the event was a response to a divine call to make a difference in the Health sector across the continent by creating a pool of knowledge with Nurses as resource persons.

"Babcock is the pioneer platform for the project because of its passion for excellence and brand reputation," said Nnamchi.

VOICES FROM THE AUDITORIUM

Boluwatife ADENIYI, BU Nursing: The program is great and has motivated me to go on in spite of the challenges of the profession.

Mubarak OLALEYE, Sacred Heart School of Nursing, Abeokuta:

The programme certainly helps to promote health education. The facilitator is a great motivation to want to learn, teach and impact other lives.

Esther OJETOKUN – BU Nursing

This seminar is making me see Nursing from a completely different perspective. It has inspired my desire to remain in the profession rather than switching over to Medicine.

Divine AMIEWA-LAN, BU Nursing:

Besides expanding my knowledge base, it has inspired me to become a better nurse by learning from the experience of others. It also reinforced my resolve to uphold the professional ethics and maintaining good health so I can better help others.

Precious NWANKWO – BU Nursing

We have heard and learned so many things through shared experiences that have motivated me to dream big, become a better nurse and do something to make a difference by helping others and inspiring them to become better persons.

BUTH STEPS UP ROLL BACK MALARIA PROGRAMME

Health advocates for a malaria-free community: I-r: Mrs Ngozi Olarimoye, Mrs Beatrice Mark and Mrs Nkechi Nwankwo

s global attention shifts to maternal and child health, the Babcock University Teaching Hospital has stepped up its action plan to reduce malaria mortality rate in the country through collaboration with the WHO.

According to the Hospital's Community Medicine Immunization Officer, Mrs.

Beatrice Mark, the tripartite collaboration which also involved the Ikenne Local Government Council, entailed distribution of insecticide-treated mosquito nets to members of the University community and catchment areas.

Mrs. Nkechi Nwankwo, the Tuberculosis Officer, added that these areas include the University staff quarters, old Oba road, parts of Dee Unique area and Methodist road. Mrs. Mark said while the Ikenne Local Government Council in collaboration with the WHO released 1,900 nets, 1581 were collected and 319 nets were returned to the Council. She said this was because some members did not come to collect theirs nets due to tight schedules.

Another staff, Mrs. Ngozi Olarimoye who is a Health Therapist, added that it was in recognition of this that the net distribution programme of May 1 - 5, 2018 was extended to May 7.

"We thank God for the effectiveness of this tripartite collaboration because Babcock was credited with 88% success rate at the grand finale of the program," said Mrs. Nwankwo. "Meanwhile, the council is working on the data to see the possibility of a mop-up for individuals who did not get theirs."

- Nigeria has the world's highest incidence of malaria accounting for about 300,000 deaths annually.
- Only 3% of the country's population live in the malaria free highlands.

Mr. Solomon Oyewunmi: Promoting a culture of saving for the future.

"SAVE MORE," BABCOOP SECRETARY

Secretary of the Babcock University Cooperative Society, BABCOOP, Mr. Solomon Oyewunmi has called on members to increase their savings for the rainy days.

"Our members need to understand that the more their savings, the more their dividends," said Mr. Oyewunmi while explaining the Cooperative's operations and future strategic plans.

"When they save more, they are also planning for tomorrow as this would usually come handy while awaiting their pension, which may take time to mature."

On its investment policy, Mr. Oyewunmi said Babcoop only operated a fixed deposit with WEMA Bank for additional income since it was unwilling to take unnecessary risks and could not invest without approval from the house. Even so, he said it recently assisted in financing the purchase of land in Irolu for the Association of Babcock University Staff, ABUS, given the assurance for recouping both principal and interest.

He attributed the Cooperative's success to confidence reposed on the management team as well as the prompt response to loan applications from the membership which now stands at 800.

He said with the exception of the Clerk who receives a monthly stipend, Babcoop executive committee members led by Professor Afolabi do not get any rewards or remunerations.

Other members of the committee, whose tenure was extended recently, are Dr. Samuel Amanze, Mr. Solomon Obida, Mr. Olusola Jimoh and Barrister Joseph Agada.

B abcock Centre for Executive Development is open to proposals to partner Elano Investments Ltd to run programmes for the Indorama Eleme Petrochemicals Ltd (IEPL) host communities.

The partnership is expected to cover educational, health and empowerment programmes.

Director of BCED, Prof. Johnson Egwakhe, led a three-man delegation during a working visit to the company's head office in Port Harcourt to shed further light on the proposal.

"We are impressed with your dedication to poverty alleviation and gift of a future community members can be proud of," he said.

The partnership will address development challenges of the seven host communities as well as offer a competitive and transformational education with the establishment of a secondary school with the Babcock brand name.

Within the framework of the programme, business clusters will be organized for women and part-time education for matured students to enhance their wealth creation capacity nationally and globally.

He extended an invitation to the Elano

Board Chair, Chief Gomba Okanje and Directors to visit the university during its convocation ceremonies to take a look at available facilities and services.

In response, Chief Okanje, thanked Babcock for the offer with the promise to evaluate its feasibility in achieving the common objectives of all stakeholders. "The core objective of Elano is to touch lives especially among the most vulnerable," Chief Okanje said. "We are eager to partner with any development agency, organizations and institutions with like minds," he said.

Other team members from Babcock were: Dr. Adebowale Oyebamiji representing the Leo Graduating PG class and Mr. Government Osaro.
